Dustin Crawford is a Lecturer at Utah State University and the Assistant Director of the USU Writing Program. Since coming to USU in 2003, Dustin has taught composition and the breadth–depth literature courses for the Department of English. Currently most of his work focuses on narrative and oral history and their use in historiography, community building, and violence. His work also includes “The Ties That Bind” a study of terrorist groups around the globe and their reliance on specific narratives as a tool of recruitment, a biographical sketch of Nellie Campobello, and works on travel literature and tourism in Mexico.
