Leslie Leek is an Idaho native. She lives in Pocatello and is retired from teaching in the Department of Communication and Rhetorical Studies at Idaho State University. She is the author of two collections of short stories, the most recent, Unsettled Territory published by Blue Scarab Press in 2012. She's published stories and essays in several state anthologies and regional literary magazines, is a past recipient of a Literature Fellowship from the Idaho Arts Commission and participated in the Tumble Words program providing writing workshops and readings in rural Idaho communities. She has always loved books, libraries and conversation and has fond memories of her mother, older sister and other community members creating the first Clark County library in a train caboose donated by Union Pacific.
